

Latest AI News - July 2025

OpenAI's New Creative Writing Model

OpenAI has unveiled a new AI model proficient in creative writing, particularly in the metafiction genre. CEO Sam Altman shared a story generated by this model, showcasing its advanced capabilities. However, this development has sparked criticism from the creative industry, with concerns over copyright infringement.

Legal Actions Against Meta Over Copyright Infringement

French publishers and authors have filed a lawsuit against Meta, accusing the company of using their copyrighted works without permission to train its AI model. The groups demand the removal of data directories created by Meta for AI training.

European Start-Ups Leveraging AI for Business Innovation

Various European start-up hubs are driving innovation, particularly in artificial intelligence (AI). These hubs have fostered companies like Klarna, Celonis, and Isar Aerospace, aiming to close the innovation gap with the US and China.

Palantir's Expansion with New AI Clients

Palantir's stock experienced an uptick following the announcement of new clients, including Walgreens and Heineken. Other additions to Palantir's clientele include RaceTrac and Ripcord.

Scopely's Acquisition of Pokémon Go Amid AI Shift

Scopely, a Saudi-owned game developer known for Monopoly Go!, has acquired Pokémon Go and other apps from Niantic for $3.5 billion. This strategic move aligns with Niantic's focus on developing geospatial AI.